The rowhouse is three bays wide and three stories high. The foundation wall is stone and is punctuated by two identical flat opening for windows. The building wall is laid in running bond brick. Two flat wood double doors surmount four marble steps and a marble stoop. The doors are emphasized by a painted wood half-arch surround and surmounted by a single light half arched transom. Two identical half arched openings for windows, now boarded, punctuate the left side of the first story facade. A large iron window basket supported by four iron brackets spans the first story facade in front of the window openings. These are capped with half arched brick lintels. Throughout the facade, fenestration is proportional and symmetrical. Both the second and third story facades are punctuated by three half arched openings for windows. All six of these openings are accompanied by half arched brick lintels and wood sills. Except for the center opening punctuating the second story facade, fenestration is half arched and double hung with four over four lights. The facade wall is capped in a wood frieze which in turn is surmounted by a painted wood decorative cornice. The roof is flat.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This building is similar to many dwellings along Druid Hill Avenue and McCulloh Street. These streets are especially noticeable in Upton for the large houses of Upton's wealthy citizenry in the late nineteenth century. The detailed wrought iron balcony is one of the many ornamentalations visible throughout formerly wealthy sections of the community.
